Mrs. McKinney Will Discuss Referendum Here Sunday, Sept. 26

Mrs. L. C. McKinney, M. L. A., is to address the citizens of Gleichen and district on the prohibition referendum on Sunday, Sept. 26th. Her subject will be "Shall the importation and bringing of intoxicating liquors into the Province be forbidden?" Mrs. McKinney will speak at Bow Valley Church at 11 a.m., Cluny School House at 3 p.m. and in the Gleichen Opera House at 7:45 p.m. Questions and discussion on the subject.

QUEENSTOWN NEWS

Mrs. McKinney, M.L.A., gave an interesting address to the women of "Women's Peace in the World's Work" at the U.F.A. meeting.

On September 25th Mrs. O. C. Edwards is to speak on the "Legal Status of Women" at the U.F.A. meeting.

While the rest of us are bustling to keep from being hungry, some Irishmen across the pond would die rather than eat, and it costs them nothing. You can't trust the Irish.

The most great event of the district will take place Friday evening September 17th, in the hall. It will be an after-largest dance. Mrs. Trainor's famous Calgary orchestra has been engaged and a fine time is expected.

Union Church Notes

The Women's Missionary Society will meet on Friday evening, Sept. 17th, at the home of Mrs. W. J. McMillen. Subject: "Mission Among the Lovers in India, Japan and the Philippines." Subject for roll call: "Crosses." It is hoped that all members will attend this first meeting after the holiday season.

The Sunday School invites all friends to attend Rally Day service on Sunday morning, Sept. 19th.

The service on that evening will be cancelled in favor of the Mass meeting on the Prohibition Referendum, which will be held in the Opera House and will be addressed by Mrs. L. C. McKinney, M.L.A., President of the A.S.S.L.

The usual services next Sunday, September 19th.

The Ladies Circle desire to thank all who donated eggs or who contributed in any other way to the sale held in the G.W.V.A. Hall last Saturday. The proceeds of the sale were about $40. The ladies wish especially to express appreciation for the use of the G.W.V.A. Hall.

Gleichen's contribution to honor the boys who gave their life's blood and those who were wounded, fought and suffered in the greatest war the world ever knew is to be unveiled Armistice Day, November 11th, and every effort will be made to make this the greatest day ever known in this town and district. It is expected the town will be filled with people that day not only from every part of the district but from many other parts, and a real earnest attempt made to show that our appreciation of valor and courage is not of the temporal value, but that we have taken time to consider doing something that will last throughout the centuries to come and show that we have considered the future in our preparations—something that our children and their children will have to think of.

In order to make this commemorative day pass off smoothly it is necessary that before the unveiling the cost of this tribute should receive full attention and now is the time. To do this there should be no need to seek contributions, we who remained at home should now as readily volunteer our mite as did those brave fellows who so willingly volunteered from 1914 to the close of the war. Send your contributions, large or small, to Treas. Thos. Henderson, Gleichen District Memorial Fund.

The Finance Committee has decided to have a drive for October 20, 21, to raise the full amount required. During these days a systematic canvass will be made and every person will be given an opportunity to contribute.

Thanks Gleichen People

The Call has received the following personal letter from Mr. J. H. Woolf, editor of the Calgary Daily Herald, which we take the liberty of publishing, believing it of interest to our readers, particularly as it shows the efforts of the people of Gleichen on August 19th were appreciated:

Dear Mr. Evans:

Having just now returned from my western trip with the Imperial Press delegation, I want to express to you, and through you to the people of Gleichen, the deep appreciation felt by everyone concerned with the splendid entertainment that you put up on August 19th. I might perhaps express special thanks to the Mayor, the President of your Board of Trade, and to the chairman of the various committees, as well as to our good friends the Blackfoot Indians; but after all the success of affairs of this kind depends not only on the heads but on the general support of the people, and it is, after all, to the entire community of Gleichen that thanks are most due.

I talked with many of the delegates on the way west from here and found them one and all enthusiastic about their day in your town, and astonished at the perfection of the ceremony. I think we may consider that August 19th and 20th, the days of the Gleichen celebration and the drive to Banff, will stand out more vividly in the recollection of our visitors than any other two days during their Canadian tour. Again thanking you, I remain, Yours faithfully,

J. H. WOOLF,
Chairman Southern Alberta Committee.

Albion Aids to Furnish Saskatchewan With Coal
Only a shortage of cars and miners will prevent Alberta from providing Manitoba and Saskatchewan with coal next winter. Alberta coal of good quality retails in Winnipeg at $14.00 a ton, which is a shade more than $4.00 a ton in the Calgary area. The freight rate makes the difference.

Large Coal Mines to be Opened
The H. A. Ford and P. Burns coal properties, which lie in the Highwood and Sherg Creek valleys, respectively, will be developed soon, through the medium of railway facilities. The mines can supply all Canada for 1,500 years. Sixteen acres have been opened up to the Ford holdings and fourteen on the Burns.

CURRENT COMMENT

ON MATTERS OF PUBLIC INTEREST TO DWELLERS IN THE PRAIRIE PROVINCES OF CANADA

A SERIES OF ARTICLES DEALING WITH VARIOUS WESTERN QUESTIONS

NATIONALISM OF A GREAT PROFESSION

When the fathers of Confederation created Canada, they gave us a constitution admirable in many respects and under which Canada has progressed gloriously. As time has passed, however, defects presented themselves. At Confederation it was decided that the provinces should have exclusive jurisdiction in certain matters. Generally this has succeeded but in some respects it has not been wholly to the advantage of the people.

For instance, the professions are solely under provincial control, dentistry being one of these professions. It has resulted then that a man might be licensed to practice dentistry in any Ontario. As a practitioner there, he might have been a success, as a citizen he may have been of the very best type, an honor to his profession and a credit to his province, but the moment he stepped across the boundary into Manitoba, he became a criminal if he commenced the practice of his profession there without conforming to the laws of Manitoba, which meant an examination, probably months of study, and a delay with consequent financial loss. It was wrong, but how was it to be remedied?

The provinces adhered strictly to their "rights" and every legislature in Canada would refuse to surrender any of their privileges nor would they permit their jurisdiction to be invaded. "Provincial Rights" was too strong a cry for politicians to oppose, hence the wrong continued even though the people suffered.

The dentists of Canada, however, saw the wrong. The dental profession has always, and does now, take the ground that the dental law should exist for the protection of the public. Upon this broad ground they acted and in 1904 set about remedying the wrong that the Fathers of Confederation had unwittingly established. In that year a movement was set on foot having for its object the nationalization of the provincial dental license. It was a big undertaking, for it meant the harmonizing of the various dental laws of Canada, the equalization of the standards of the dental profession, the unification of dental colleges and the overcoming of a lot of prejudice which had grown up under fifty years of provincial control.

If a dentist is a good dentist in Ontario why should he not be a good dentist in Saskatchewan? This was the slogan upon which the work was started. "If a man is a good citizen in Ontario why shouldn't he be a good citizen in British Columbia?" This question was asked and fitted in with the corner stone of the foundation of the dental nationalization movement. "Let us make the Canadian dental profession as big as Canada." This was the principle upon which the profession acted. "Why shouldn't the Canadian universities and dental colleges have the whole of Canada as a field of operation for their graduates?" Nobody has ever yet advanced a sound reason as to why they shouldn't. A few it is true, have said "If you do this then all the privileges of the provincial control have gone, and any reputable dentist from any part of Canada can come in and cut into my practice." And the answer promptly came, "And why not?" At that point the opponents of nationalization are blocked.

In 1905 the movement for nationalization got nicely under way. Every province in Canada was asked to elect one representative to form the Dominion Dental Council of Canada. Quebec, British Columbia and the Yukon held aloof. The other provinces joined hands and said "We will do this best we can." Regular efforts were made to attract the others into the Canadian fold. "There shall be no coaxing and no coercion." If the other provinces want to come in all well and good, but we would not coax or attempt to coerce, for either one would be fatal to the permanency of the new nationalization movement, because of its character had to be voluntary and depend entirely upon good will and just treatment.

For sixteen years the movement has now been under way. Three years ago B.C. threw in her lot. Last year the Yukon Legislative Assembly accepted by law the Certificate of Qualification granted by the D. C. C. Now only Quebec remains out.

The certificate of qualification issued by the D. C. C. of C. is the highest standard of dental qualification in the world. This certificate is based upon five to ten years "Regular Ethical, Legal Practice," and an examination. The examination is admitted to be the fairest that is possible. Then having received this certificate the holder can at any time in his life proceed to practice in any part of Canada (except Quebec).

Thus at one stroke is demolished the old worn out argument used by back country politicians that a close corporation exists amongst provincial dentists, for the Provincial Dental Association can in no way prevent the hundreds of dentists who hold the D. C. C. certificate of qualification from coming to this or any other of the agreeing provinces.

The standard of dentistry has been perceptibly improved as a result of the coming into existence of the D. C. C. The nationalization movement has taken the best dentists to all corners of Canada instead of keeping them bottled up in the big eastern cities. The people have benefited accordingly. Let it be known that the certificate of qualification issued by the D. C. C. of C. is not obtainable by the quack.

For sixteen years this movement has been under way. Little has been said about it because the dental profession wanted to succeed, and before recent council meeting held at Ottawa has determined the permanency and success, and now it can be said with certainty that by the voluntary efforts of the dentists themselves the defect in the D. C. C. act has been overcome, the profession has been Canadianized and that by methods which in no way interfere with provincial rights.

Americans Fined
It is reported that there is a great increase in the theft of small articles from large liners. Two second class passengers of the Olympic City and Herbert Ambler of California, started by the police to be taken to the coming home for a holiday, were each fined $100.00 or a month's imprisonment for the theft of two silver-plated ash trays from the first class saloon bar of the vessel. They pleaded guilty and said they took the articles as mementos of the voyage. They also admitted that they had not been told the influence of liquor they would not have taken the ash trays.

Fish Scales Famous House
Marshall Fish has been looking, for some time, in vain for a house in Paris and the Government have recently refused to his request as he has been offered the use of a house which was famous during the hearing of the Dreyfus case and was at that time occupied by the famous Second Bureau which dealt with military affairs and it was here that Lieut.-Col. Picquet began the patient investigation that led to the bringing about the reversal and acquittal of Dreyfus.

A WEEKLY CAUSIERIE OF MATTERS—TREATED IN LIGHTER VEIN

ACTIVITY IN REGINA BOARD OF TRADE—SOME UPTOWN BUILDING SCHEMES—A REAL SHORTAGE OF HOUSES—WANTED PRACTICAL PLANS.

THE HOUSING QUESTION IN THE WEST—THEORY AND PRACTICE—CANADIAN AND AMERICAN LITERATURE—LONGFELLOW AND MARK TWAIN—CALIFORNIA OF FORTY-NINE—THE STORY OF MIGGLES.

The Regina Board of Trade has been entering on a period of activity. A drive was recently undertaken for new members and it was successful. The idea was that great things should be done to promote the financial and social welfare of the capital city of Saskatchewan. The first of these activities was the discussion, the other night, of the housing problem. I was an interested auditor. The speaker of the evening was the Hon. Geo. Bell, a former member of the Saskatchewan Government, and he went into a long explanation of various housing schemes recently undertaken in England during the war. The address was much more academic than practical, which was also true with one or two exceptions, of the discussion which followed.

Mr. Bell's exposition showed clearly that the housing schemes in use in England, Australia, New Zealand and elsewhere, were not applicable to the conditions of this country. He said that the means did not prevent them from putting out capital necessary to buy homes of their own in the usual manner. He laid great stress on the fact that all these schemes provided that there should be no unearned increment caused by the increasing price of the property by reason of building operations, or that if an inflation of land prices should occur, it should inure to the benefit of the scheme. This was the line followed by most of the speakers who came after Mr. Bell, and it seemed to me there was a great deal of too much theory and too little of practical plan.

One gentleman expressed his doubt as to whether there was a housing problem in the cities and towns of Saskatchewan at all and made a motion that he should be a committee to investigate.

The facts are very patent. There is a tremendous shortage of houses and it is militating very strongly against urban development. Industrial concerns will hesitate to establish themselves in places where their workers can not find houses. Rents in places like Regina are becoming almost prohibitive. I know of one place where a seven roomed unfurnished house is bringing $100 per month, and if the present congestion continues some people will have to sleep in the streets and parks. The reason for the shortage is that house building is not going on and the reason for this is that house building is not proceeding, is that the cost of labor and material is most unreasonably high in Regina, for instance, it is not the workers only who need houses; it is practically every section of the community, and it is not a paternal government controlled housing scheme that will give relief; we need some stimulus to individual effort.

Talking about "curbing the unearned increment" was just as much twaddle. If you take away entirely the speculative element in house building, you remove one of the strong motives. It was to a great extent the "unearned increment" that furnished the motive for the building of Regina, Saskatoon, Moose Jaw and Calgary, and many other western cities. What we need is some scheme whereby builders' supplies can be obtained at reasonable figures at wholesale instead of retail. Advantageous contracts may be made for lumber with the big mills at the Pacific coast, and were an interested municipality to properly assist in wholesale buying direct from manufacturers, the present cost of material would be cut down very much. It is true freight rates from the Pacific mills are high, but there is no reason why some arrangement could not be made in this respect. Last year when there was an acute shortage of hay in western Saskatchewan and Alberta, arrangements were made to transport a great quantity of fodder free of charge. There was a urgent need of food for cattle, but there is nearly as urgent a need for material for building purposes to provide shelter for women and children. It should, therefore, be possible to make some arrangements to obtain freight rates on a par, in respect. Municipal or co-operative brick plants and gravel pits would also help the situation.

In any case the situation is a very serious one and the Board of Trade and other organizations cause philanthropy with it from a purely academic standpoint and do nothing to practical and constructive business.

In lamenting the paucity of Canadian literature one often hears the idea expressed that it is the duty of a very young country to have a literature of its own—that stirring history, and tradition, and the savour of age and the life of the country. There was, and is, in time Canada will produce real poets, and historians, and weavers of the true Canadian story. At present our literary productions are neither distinguished for their quality nor their quantity. Apart from the western writers of the French Canadian writers, some of whom have displayed real merit, there are only a few books—and they are very few at all—which are entitled to an enduring place in the literature of the Dominion.

First and foremost there is Francis Parkman, who in his books dealing with the "Old West," tells us a glowing and accurate picture of the romantic days of New France; of seigneurs and governors; of Indian wars and expeditions. Parkman's work has penetrated into the untrodden wilderness, so remote as to be almost mythical; of La Salle and Hennepin; of Montcalm and Montcalm; and of Wolfe, whose dying eyes kindled at the shouts of victory which preceded the passing of Canada into British hands. He is the only writer of the first rank who is entitled to a place in our literature.

The "Golden Dog" of Kirby although of an entirely different type, will undoubtedly remain a classic. It is neither a work of genius, nor of intensity, but it is sympathetic and painstaking, and is a true picture of Quebec in the days when French Colonial policy was decided by the caprice of Pempodour or a Dubarry, and French feudalism flourished on the ruins of St. Lawrence. Perhaps too much praise is taken with detail to furnish the staccato march of events so popular in the modern novel, but nevertheless the "Golden Dog" is accurate in its details, and is perhaps the most reliable picture we have of the life of the people of New France during one of the most interesting periods in the life of the country.

Judge Haliburton, with his "Sun-Slick" series is also entitled to honorable place, but apart from these three, there is little remarkable in our literature.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY
Gillett's Lye has long been regarded as a household necessity because of the fact that it is useful in so many ways, and so satisfactory in every respect that no woman feels that she can keep her house without it. Makes the most kind of spots for washing and cleansing. One can of Gillett's Lye will make ten pounds of good soap in twenty minutes. Many of its uses are shown in booklet under the label.
"GILLETT'S LYE EATS DIRT"
Made in Canada.

Nor have the United States produced many more notable authors. They console themselves by saying "We are still young; give us time and we will manufacture an author who will lick the bones of the best English writers."

It is notable that most of the real literature which has been produced in the United States came into being when the country was young. Of course, there was a reason for this. America was English, if not in government, in tradition and sentiment. The Virginia squires, who fought for the Revolution, were for the most part, as were their British heritage, and with the possible exception of their own black slaves, were as English in their thoughts, life, and customs as their land-owning ancestors in Kent, Gloucestershire or the north country. Those who had a "fair" for literature, were the beneficiaries of Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton, the Elizabethans, and the modern romantics whose works had been familiar in England by the classical translations which preceded them. The most remarkable literary work in the English language, the James I translation of the Bible.

The period when the British influence was still paramount in American education and literature was the richest which so far has occurred in that country. When it passed and a time was reached when the people of the United States were straining after a literature characteristic of their country, there was a considerable hiatus, and so far as the really great American modern author has put in an appearance.

Washington Irving, the voluminous biographer of Washington, the creator of the mythical Rip Van Winkle, the author of the "Sketch Book," and "Astoria," was unquestionably of the first rank in the English language. He was the first of the great American authors; and of his countrymen, he was the first to take the wonderful romance of nation and human suffering. "The Scarlet Letter."

Samuel Clemens, who wrote under the name of "Mark Twain" was perhaps the most celebrated and the most successful of American authors characteristic of his own country; but although his works contain passages of pathos and strength, he was essentially a humorist, and when a writer goes in obviously for humor and merriment, it is a little difficult to take him with the seriousness of a great figure in the literature of his country. Yet Mark Twain was very nearly that.

Oliver Wendell Holmes was a man of letters and a scholar, but he might have been an Oxford professor, or any other English-speaking author, and there is little of the individuality which his work with his own country.

Longfellow is the only American who could claim to be a poet, and he, at best, was only a graceful writer in verse. He had none of the fire, intensity, or power of genius. He did, indeed, give expression to some heroic description and splendid passages, but they were borrowed. The Song of King Olaf, with its ring of combat, its shock of ships, and the dash of her change was borrowed from the "Skjoldunga" of Snorre, an Icelandic skald.

The Personal Side

PROMINENT WESTERN CHARACTERS—SOME INTERESTING ANECDOTES OF PEOPLE WE ALL KNOW

NEARLY HANGED

D. D. Broadfoot, a well-known and prosperous farmer of the Elbow district of Saskatchewan, a few weeks ago was strolling in the Midway at the Regina Agricultural Fair when the writer of this article ran into him. He had not seen Mr. Broadfoot for a number of years, and the man that nearly succeeded in hanging some twenty years ago.

I will tell the story, using the personal pronoun: Mr. Broadfoot, who, by the way, is the most splendid, decent, genial fellow in the world, had newly arrived in Eastern Canada from Fargo, Ontario, if I am not mistaken. He had some money and was anxious to buy land. E. D. McCallum-Hill & Co., and myself, were negotiating with the C.P.R. for the purchase of a tract of land whose sagas have been passed around the winter past fires of Ireland for a thousand years; the story of the most remarkable work. Some of his tales are obviously artificial and others bear the stamp of real genius. "Tennessee's Partner" and "Miggles" are real classics. The story of Miggles is one of absolute human interest and pathos. A freethinker and a rainstorm along a mountain road had halted the stage coach, and the passengers sought shelter in a cabin in the woods. The occupants of which were, an innkeeper, a paralytic of a man who fell from his chair when he was propped up, and a splendid vigorous girl. She was handsome and attractive, and the passengers with the gallantry native to California, paid her great attention. At length to disarm them she told them a simple yet heroic story of her condition.

Mr. Broadfoot is one of the most outstanding. He wrote of an epoch in American history, the California of '49, when picturesque Castilians still lived like patriarchs on their great domains, when Mexican bandits and Yankee queros in all their brave attire, using lances and performed equestrian prodigies; when the lure of gold lured men to the gold fields, and the clipper ships ran their Easting off Cape Horn and raced into "Frisco" through the Golden Gate.

Bret Harte's pictures are vivid and real. When I went down the Sacramento Valley a few years ago, for the first time, I felt that I knew the region from his descriptions. As the Shasta Limited with its dining car, and observation; its coloured attendants; its stenographer and valet service; and all its modern appointments, swung past a fragment of woodland road, it seemed to me as if Jack Hamelin must ride out of the trees, dressed in frock coat and high boots, his horse caparisoned in the Spanish style, and wave his sombrero at us. That river bar was naked without the red right hand, and the land on which he might have been engaged in the hectic search for gold; and surely in yonder bend of the trail the old Concord coach, with the arrival of the old Concord coach, with its four horses, the wheeler, the trap, and the lead horse, the wagon, the stage, the mail, the messenger with his weapon ready against road agents, and Yuba Bill himself, leading the line of the forty-niners and he has left us a picture of them that may never fade.

So cashing in her gold and trinkets, she had built the cabin in the wilderness and brought this poor relic of a man to the sweet woodland air of the mountains, to care for him while his life lasted. The morning day Jim came in and sat in her parlor and fell under a stroke. He had lived hard, she said, and the doctor declared that he would never be better. "He had spent a night of money on me," said the girl, "and I fixed to take care of him."

I have overrun my space this week, but next week will try to tell you something of a more modern American author who gave prominence of great things before he was cut down in the pride of his youth.

Mr. Broadfoot, who, by the way, is the most splendid, decent, genial fellow in the world, had newly arrived in Eastern Canada from Fargo, Ontario, if I am not mistaken. He had some money and was anxious to buy land. E. D. McCallum-Hill & Co., and myself, were negotiating with the C.P.R. for the purchase of a tract of land north of Swift Current and close to Saskatchewan Landing. Mr. Broadfoot knew about the deal and wanted to get in on it, and he accompanied us on the inspection trip. In those days there was no railway from Swift Current and no settlers to speak of. The only living things between the Saskatchewan and the main line of the C.P.R. were antelope, coyotes and gophers. There were one or two ranch houses in the creeks. We got a democrat to deliver the Swift Current and started for the river during the afternoon of a warm summer's day. It may be necessary to explain to newcomers that a democrat was neither a Bolshevik nor an Irish-American, but a species of light spring wagon. We were heading for the hospitable ranch of Mrs. Godwin at the Landing, but missed our way. We were still on the plains when darkness came down and the mosquitoes were literally by the millions. We got down into the valley of the Saskatchewan through an old cattle trail and could not get out again in the darkness. We found an old cattle shed in which we slumbered most uneasily until dawn. With the rising of the sun we purged ourselves of mosquitoes and made haste by a plunge in the river, and getting our directions we reached the Godwin place in time for breakfast. After a good meal we decided to continue upon our work of examining the land. It occurred to me that a good saddle pony would be of material assistance in locating corner stakes and we asked Mrs. Godwin if she could give us one. She said, "The bunch are out on the hill there, saddle one of your drivers and run them into the corral and you will have a fine horse." We accordingly drove them in and fixed my eye on a handsome chestnut that had saddle marks on it. The horses were all fresh and sleek-looking from the young grass and cavorted around the corral. Mr. Broadfoot was greatly interested. He said, "How are you going to catch them?" In my youth, for my sins, I had spent some time on the range and was fairly familiar with the lariats. There was a fine, hard twist-rope with a honda fastened to the saddle and I uncalled it and proceeded to rope the horse I wanted. There is a very easy way of catching a horse in the corral if you are at all familiar with the rope. You run a little circle, which includes your victim, in a corner of the fence, which the rope around your own legs, and then you pull it by one, and as the one you wish to catch is heading straight away from you, you let go your rope. The galloping horses take the twist of the rope and the very shock and effective. It is really the easiest way to achieve your purpose. A cowboy is not supposed to sling a rope around his head in a corral. More by good luck than good guidance I got the chestnut to the saddle and he threw me and he fell. Broadfoot was startled; this was the real wild west. He had never seen a lariar thrown in his life before and he thought it wonderful. I added the horse, the team was hitched up. I went one way and Broadfoot went the other. We were heading for the corral. I was at the corner of a certain section. The foreman passed quickly and at the appointed hour I rode down to the rendezvous. The prize was a very fat there and from a long distance I could see the horse around the corral. When the prize was the driver was moving the horses across the prairie at a slow trot. Broadfoot was sitting in the back seat eating his lunch and Mr. McCallum was running behind endeavoring to throw the rope over him. He said to me, "Here I know this man, he has talked about nothing else except bronchos since you got that horse this morning! I don't know how to work the darned rope."

I uncalled the lariar from the saddle and made two passes around my head, but found that the horse was or two stand for it. I thought if I were going to lasso Broadfoot I might as well do it in style, so I centered up the trail about 300 yards from the corral and I turned out. When the horse was dead run twisting the rope around my hand. I intended to drop it over him as I passed and let it pay out, thinking it would likely give him a fright but nothing more. I was sure I had untied the rope from the corral and I turned out. I was another of those cases when you "didn't think it was loaded." As I came down just as tight as the horse would jump, and swinging the rope, Broadfoot went contentedly on with his back, as I passed and he took the rope and got him to the shoulders, pinning his arms to his sides. I checked the horse somewhat as the rope paid out, but he had apparently been in the game before. The end was still fast to the saddle horn and the incident of the rope was over. The horse was kept with the consequence that Broadfoot came out of the corral as if he had been shot from a catapult. He turned over in the air and being a heavy man, came down in a queer hunched sitting position. He was not hurt, but he was very angry. We were all appalled. For a minute I thought I had killed the man. McCallum stood aghast with his little, ineffectual bit of his hand, and the driver unconsciously kept plugging to away across the prairie. When the horse was dead I was not dead I was afraid to loosen the rope for fear he would get up and kill me. The very minute he had been caught he had been setting his teeth in a great bank of broad chest and, as he sat on the prairie, with his arms pinned to his sides, he had a great piece of it in his mouth. There was silence for a second; then Broadfoot spat out the bread and cheese and made some exceedingly profane remarks. He took the whole thing in very excellent part. He was wearing a light grey Norfolk suit and the friction of the rope had cut one of the sleeves almost off. He was black and blue and his arms were badly hurt. I have never drawn a rope at a man since. If I had got around the neck it would have pulled his head off.

MRS. COLEMAN

Everyone in the west will sympathize with D. C. Coleman, Vice-President of the C.P.R., in his sad bereavement which he has recently experienced. His wife was drowned whilst holidaying at Lake Windermere Camp, a beautiful place in Columbia Valley. Mr. Coleman is known to a great many people in Western Canada. He is a young man, in the very prime of his life and occupies one of the most important positions in the eye of the public. In addition he is a man of amiable and pleasant characteristics and the family circle is very happy. He and his wife and two small sons made a charming and affectionate family circle. Mrs. Coleman, who was married in 1906, was born at Cranbrook, B.C., and passed most of her girlhood with her parents in Calgary. She was a clever and active woman, and very fond of the out-of-doors. She was an accomplished horse woman, skater and swimmer and the life and soul of any engaged club in many of the city's athletic and anthropic activities. Mr. Coleman, as a relaxation from his arduous duties has always taken a great interest in literary matters and devoted particular attention to the history of Western Canada. He has a very extensive library, and is very much interested in Western Canada, and his wife was as keenly interested in these subjects as himself. She was a real helpmate, and the sympathy of everyone in this little western country goes out to the bereaved husband and two little boys, who have been left motherless.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

Keep November 11th ever in mind.

Ideal harvest weather throughout and continuing for thrashing.

Mrs. A. Reel has returned from visiting relatives at Carleton.

Miss Tulhove returned Tuesday to Calgary after spending a vacation with her parents.

The hum of the separator is heard throughout the land and soon the actual facts will be known.

The Gleichen Veterans have decided to give a bumpersteer ball on Thanksgiving evening. But it will be a dandy.

The tax sale last Saturday was not completed but will be Saturday next. Here is a chance to get some good lots cheap on which to build.

Mrs. M. Peterson has moved in to town from Lake MacGregar with her family to take advantage of our splendid Public and Agricultural School.

To expect your full share of trade without advertising is about on the same level as expecting to make a profit on goods brought in from the east by ox cart would be.

Jack Moss brought in some of his wheat Monday to have it graded and the elevator men gave it No. 1. He says he has 1000 bushels like the sample.

It is up to Gleichen to find board and room for the pupils of our new Agricultural School. For thirteen years we wanted to get this school and now we cannot quit.

November 11th, 1920.

W. J. Lublaw has sold his farm three miles southeast of Blind Creek postoffice and will move to B.C. He has instructed A. R. Tulhove to sell by auction his livestock, implements, etc., on Tuesday, Oct. 5th.

John W. Huggill, of the Law Society of Alberta and Saskatchewan, for the past nine years associated with the law department of the Canadian Pacific Railway as the assistant solicitor at Calgary, announces he is now engaged in a general law practice at 202-203 - 17th Exchange Building, Calgary.

The Old World newspapers are only now beginning to reach here with the reports of the Imperial Press delegates visit to Gleichen and our stampede. The London Times so far gives the best report. The papers from Australia, New Zealand, Africa, India and other distant parts should soon arrive. Gleichen is on the map right this time.

Last week plasterers were busy on the exterior of St. Victor's Roman Catholic Church with the result that it presents a vastly improved appearance with its slate colored roof and white grey trimmed walls.

It is the intention of the local committee in charge to make a complete renovation of the interior at an early date. A campaign to raise $1000 to carry on the work is underway. Grading, fencing and siting of the church and cemetery grounds are also included in the program.

When the date on the label of this paper is reached it is a sign the editor would like more money to gaze on more of your collateral, and soon after you miss receiving The Call.
